

Don't speak with hatred voice, Mona Sahlin! Speak with love and inclusion.

Yesterday, on the glorious solidarity day, First of May, the former socialist leader, Mona Sahlin, talked very aggressively against a neo-Nazi demonstration held by young confused men, in the town of Jönköping. She even supported the anti-democratic people that sat down in front of the Nazi demonstration, refusing the Neo-Nazis to perform their demonstration. Fighting against anti-democratic demonstrations with anti-democratic methods, that is. Like shooting people because they are not anti-violence, peaceful people.

Are we approaching the same conflictual climate, the same separation, the same division in Sweden as they are in Ukraina? As expressed in this video:

I despise Mona Sahlin for her speech. For her hatred speech. For her support of the anti-democratic action. I despise her for supporting, yes, for being a necessary part, a logical part in this conflict. She is a Hegelian necessity of the conflict, of these fights.

I despise her for turning her back to her own people.

As a socialist Mona, you should recognize the working class people, even if it is the lumpen proletariat. That is your people, Mona! Even if they carry Nazi symbols. It is your people! Why don't you recognize them? Why do you disown them? Why have you forsaken them?

Do not turn your back on them. Go and talk to them. Talk. Talk. And talk. Jesus would have done it. Desmond Tuto would have done it. We all have to do it. Talk, for the sake of democracy. For the sake of peace. For the sake of showing that we all need to be together.

By aggression you do not win people, you win over them. You win over them by killing them, by humiliating them, by repressing them.

By meeting them, you can win them. You can win their heart. That is true victory. Without distance and hatred. With understanding and love!
